

What is moral principles?

Pogramming assignment

Moral principles are a set of rules operating in society that a person is assisted from an early age. It should be noted that each person passes several stages of moral development at different stages of his life, and its moral principles may vary under the influence of many external factors. It is moral principles that allow us to choose the right life path and affect decision-making in accordance with our conscience throughout our life. In the regulatory sense, moral principles are the preference and postulation of ethically positive views, personal patterns, the choice of good, and not evil, truth, not lies.

Modern morality

People in the 21st century are often negotiated by generally accepted standards and orders. Modern society refuses to take many moral laws without evidence, just for faith. However, ten biblical commandments remain relevant to today and are not denied even by adherents of logical morality. We often hear that the modern man does not need moral principles. Is it really?
